I hate Agile because

There is no right way

Business-driven engineering

Agile does not scale

Terminal juniority of programmers

A fad

A lot of Jargon

Agile is just rework

No estimates

No architecture

What is Agile - a process, a tool, a approach?

Agile is Easy to Say

Agile disturb the equilibrium

Where are the mangers?

Agile is dead

It is micromanagement in the name of commitment

No standards

No planning

No documentation

How can I control some thing if I can not measure?

I am responsible for my work not for others

Lots of meetings

People need to be managed

So many frameworks & methodologies

Just chaos

No Testing

Agile = end of freedom

I just hate it

Too much of freedom

A cult

Many certification bodies

It's stupidly, dangerously short-term

It has no regard for career coherency

Agile is Brittle

Its purpose is to identify low performers, but it has an unacceptably high false positive rate

No discipline

Programmers Anarchy

An Agile practitioner is a disaster for the job market

- He is multi skilled, he is a job killer.

- He produces bug-free code, kills job opportunities for testers.

- He keeps automating repetitive tasks, kills job for juniors.

- He speaks to customers regularly, he kills job for Business Analysts.

- He is part of self-organized teams, he kills job for managers.

- He shares information freely, he kills job for trainers.

- He codes, design, and architect, he kills job of paper architects.

- He is a team player, he kills job in HR management.

- He is part of collocated teams, he kills job in the travel industry.

- He communicates all the time with remote team mates, again he kills jobs in the travel industry.

Agile practitioners are job killers, we want our waterfall men back.

We do not want disaster boys, we need grown-up men.
